

My Lord Berkeley, during all this Expedition, has had a great deal of unusual trouble by reason of the Imbarcations of the Soldiers; notwithstanding which (both, by his Advice at Councils of War, and issuing of Orders, which his Lordship has done very methodically) hath behaved himself (in my Opinion) with all the Conduct and Prudence that could be expected from any Gentleman in his Station.

Lieutenant-General Talmash, the Earl of Macclessield, my Lord Cutts, and all the Offizers of the Land-Forces (I think) have shown all the forwardness and readiness imaginable, for the attempting any thing that was possible to be done on this occasion.

There are no Officers of Note (that I can yet hear of) kill d in this Action, but Monfieur Lamote; and Lieutenant-General Talmash died the Tuesday following of the Wound he received in his Thigh; but there are several Captains, &c. who are either kill d or taken, whose Names I am as yet ignorant of.

PREFACE.

HERE is nothing in which the generality of Mankind are so much mistaken, as when they talk of Government. The different Effects of it are obvious to every one, but few can trace its Causes. Most Men having indigested Ideas of the Nature of it, attribute all public Miscarriages to the corruption of Mankind. They think the whole Mass is infected, that it's impossible to make any Reformation, and so submit patiently to their Countries Calamities, or else share in the Spoil: whereas Complaints of this kind are as old as the World, and every Age has thought their own the worst. We have not only our own Experience, but the Example of all Times, to prove that Men in the same Circumstances will do the same things, call them by what Names of distinction you please. A Government is a mere piece of Clockwork, and having such Springs and Wheels, must act after such a manner: and therefore the Art is to constitute it so, that it must move to the public Advantage. It is certain that every Man will act for his own Interest; and all wise Governments are founded upon that Principle: So that this whole Mystery is only to make the Interest of the Governors and Governed the same. In an Absolute Monarchy, where the whole Power is in one Man, his Interest will only be regarded: In an Aristocracy the Interest of a few; and in a free Government the Interest of every one. This would be the Case of England if som Abuses that have lately crept into our Constitution were remov'd. The Freedom of this Kingdom depends upon the Peoples chusing the House of Commons, who are a part of the Legislature, and have the sole power of giving Mony. Were this a true Representative, and free from external Force or private Bribery, nothing could pass there but what they thought was for the public Advantage. For their own Interest is so interwoven with the Peoples, that if they all for themselves (which every one of them will do as near as he can) they must all for the common Interest of England. And if a few among them should find it their Interest to abuse their Power, it will be the Interest of all the rest to punish them for it: and then our Government would all mechanically, and a Rogue will as naturally be hang'd, as a Clock strike twelve when the hour is com. This is the Fountain-head from whence the People expect all their Happiness, and A 2

the redress of their Grievances: and if we can preserve them free from Corruption, they will take care to keep every body else so. Our Constitution seems to have provided for it, by never suffering the King (till Charles the Second's Reign) to have a Mercenary Army to frighten them into a Compliance, nor Places or Revenues great enough to bribe them into it. The Places in the King's Gift were but few, and most of them Patent Places for Life, and the rest great Offices of State enjoy'd by single Persons, which seldom fell to the share of the Commons, such as the Lord Chancellor, Lord Treasurer, Privy-Seal, Lord Fligh-Admiral, &c. And when these Offices were possessed by the Lords, the Commons were severe Inquisitors into their Actions. Thus the Government of England continued from the time that the Romans quitted the Island, to the time of Charles the First, who was the first I have read of that made an Opposition to himself in the House of Commons the road to Preferment; of which the Earl of Strafford and Noy were the most remarkable Instances, who from great Patriots became the chief Affertors of Despotic Power. But this serv'd only to exasperat the rest; for he had not Places enough for all that expected them, nor Mony enough to bribe them. 'Tis true, he rais'd great Sums of Mony upon the People; but it being without Authority of Parliament, and having no Army to back him, it met with such Difficulties in the raising, that it did him little good, and ended at last in his ruin, tho by the means of a long and miserable War, which brought us from one Tyranny to another; for the Army had got all things into their Power, and govern'd the Nation by a Council of War, which made all Parties join in calling in Charles the Second: So that he came in with the general applause of the People, who in a kind fit gave him a vast Revenue for Life. By this he was enabled to raise an Army; and bribe the Parliament, which he did to the purpose: But being a luxurious Prince, he could not part with great Sams at once. He only fed them from hand to mouth: So that they found it as necessary to keep him in a constant dependence upon them, as they had uson him. They knew he would give them ready Mony no longer than he had absolute necessity for them, and he had not Places enough in his disposal to secure a Majority in the House: for in those early days the Art was not found out of splitting and multiplying Places, as instead of a Lord Tr -r, to have Five Lords of the Tr -ry; instead of a Lord Ad-1, to have Seven Lords of the Ad- ty; to have Seven Commissioners of the C ___ ms; Nine of the Ex. ze; Fourteen of the N-vy Office; Ten of the St-mp Office; Eight of the Pr - ze Office; Sixteen of the Commissioners of Tr - de; Two of the P-- st Office; Four of the Transports; Four for Hackney Coaches; Four for Wine-Licenses; Four for the Victualling-Office; and multitudes of other Offices which are endless to enumerate. I believe the Gentlemen who have the good Fortune to be in som of these Imployments, will think I complement them, if. I should say they have not bin better executed since they were in so many bands, than when in fewer: and I must confess, I see no reason why they may not be made twice as many, and so ad infinitum, unless the number be ascertain'd by Parliament: and what danger this may be to our Constitution, Ithink of with Horror. For if in Ages to com they should be all given to Parliament.

Men, what will become of our so much boasted Liberty? What shall be don when the Criminal becoms the Judg, and the Malefactors are left to try themselves? We may be sure their common danger will unite them, and they will all stand by one another. I do not speak this by guess; for I have read of a Country where there was a constant Series of mismanagement for many years together, and yet no body was punished: and even in our own Country I believe, som Men now alive can remember the time, when if the then King had but twenty more Places in his disposal, or disposed of those he had to the best advantage, the Liberty of England had bin at an end. I would not be understood quite to exclude Parliament-men from having Places; for a Man may serve his Country in two Capacities: but I would not have it to be a Qualification for a Place; because a poor Borough thinks a Man fit to represent them, that therfore he must be a Statesman, a Lawyer, a Soldier, an Admiral, and what not? If this method should be taken in a future Reign, the People must not expect to see Men of A-bility or Integrity in any Places, while they hold them by no other tenure than the disservice they do their Country in the House of Commons, and are sure to be turn'd out upon every prevalent Faction on the other side. They must then never expect to see the House of Commons ast vigorously for the Interest either of King or People; but som will servilely comply with the Court to keep their Places, others will oppose it as unreasonably to get them: and those Gentlemen whose Designs are for their Countries Interest, will grow weary of the best Form of Government in the World, thinking by mistake the Fault is in our Constitution. I have heard of a Country, where the Disputes about Offices to the value of thirty thousand Pounds per Annum, have made six Millions ineffectual; what by som Mens prostitute compliance, and others openly clogging the Wheels, it has caus'd Want and Ne-cessity in all kinds of Men, Bribery, Treachery, Profaneness, Atheism, Prodigality, Luxury, and all the Vices that attend a remiss and corrupt Administration, and a universal neglect of the Public. It is natural to run from one extreme to another; and this Policy will at last turn upon any Court that uses it: for if they should be resolv'd to give all Offices to Parliament-men, the People will think themselves under a necessity to obtain a Law that they shall give none, which has bin more than once attemted in our own time. Indeed, tho there may be no great inconvenience in suffering a few Men that have Places to be in that. House, such as com in naturally, without any indirect Means, yet it will be fatal to us to have many: for all wife Governments indeavor, as much as possible, to keep the Legislative and Executive Parts asunder, that they may be a check upon one another. Our Government trusts the King with no part of the Legislative but a Negative Voice, which is absolutely necessary to preserve the Executive. One part of the Duty of the House of Commons is to punish Offenders, and redress the Grievances occasion'd by the Executive part of the Government; and how can that be don if they should happen to be the same Persons, unless they would be public spirited enough to hang or drown themselves?

But in my opinion, in another thing of no less importance, we deviated in Charles the Second's time from our Constitution: for the we were in a Capacity of punishing Offenders, yet we did not know legally who they were. The Law has bin always very tender of the Person of the King, and therfore has dispos'd the Executive part of the Government in such proper Channels, that whatsoever lesser Excesses are committed, they are not imputed to him, but his Ministers are accountable for them: His Great Seal is kept by his Chancellor, his Revenue by his Treasurer, his Laws are executed by his Judges, his Fleet is manag'd by his Lord High Admiral, who are all accountable for their Misbehavior. Formerly all Matters of State and Discretion were debated and resolv'd in the Privy Council, where every Man subscrib'd his Opinion, and was answerable for it. The late King Charles was the first who broke this most excellent part of our Constitution, by settling a Cabal or Cabinet Council, where all Matters of Consequence were debated and resolv'd, and then brought to the Privy Council to be confirm'd. The first footsteps we have of this Council in any European Government were in Charles the Ninth's time of France, when resolving to massacre the Protestants, he durst not trust his Council with it, but chose a few Men whom he call'd his Cabinet Council: and considering what a Genealogy it had, 'tis no wonder it has bin so fatal both to King and People. To the King: for wheras our Constitution has provided Ministers in the several parts of the Government to answer for Miscarriages, and to skreen him from the hatred of the People; this on the contrary protects the Ministers, and exposes the King to all the Complaints of his Subjects. And 'tis as dangerous to the People: for whatever Miscarriages there are, no body can be punish'd for them; for they justify themselves by a Sign Manual, or perhaps a privat Direction from the King: and then we have run it so far, that we can't follow it. The Consequence of this must be continual Heart-burnings between King and People; and no one can fee the Event.

A short History of Standing Armies in England.

F any Man doubts whether a Standing Army is Slavery, Popery, Mahometifm, Paganifm, Atheifm, or any thing which they pleafe, let him read,

First, The Story of Matho and Spendim at Carthage, and the Mamalukes of Egypt.

Secondly, The Historys of Strada and Bentivolio, where he will find what work nine thousand Spaniards made in the 17 Provinces, tho the Country was full of fortified Towns, possessed by the Low Country Lords, and they had affishance from Germany, England, and France.

Thirdly, The History of Philip de Commines, where he will find that Lewis the 11th inflaved the vast Country of France with 25000 Men, and that the raising 500 Horse by Philip of Burgundy firnamed the Good, was the ruin of those Provinces.

Fourthly, Ludlow's Memoirs, where he will find that an Army raised to defend our Liberties, made Footballs of that Parliament, at whose Actions all Europe stood amazed, and in a few Years set up ten several forts of Government contrary to the Genius of the whole Nation, and the opinion of half their own Body: such is the influence of a General over an Army, that he can make them act like a piece of Mechanism, whatever their privat Opinions are.

Lastly, Let him read the Arguments against a Standing Army, the Discourse concerning Militias, the Militia Reform'd, and the Answers to them: but lest all this should not satisfy him, I will here give a short History of Standing Armies in England, I will trace this Mystery of Iniquity from the beginning, and show the several steps by which it has crept upon us.

The first footsteps I find of a Standing Army in England fince the Romans left the Island, were in Richard the 2d's time, who raised four thousand Archers in Cheshire, and suffered them to plunder, live upon free Quarter, beat, wound, ravish and kill wherever they went; and afterwards he called a Parliament, encompassed them with his Archers, forced them to give up the whole Power of Parliaments, and make it Treason to endeavour to repeal any of the Arbitrary Constitutions that were then made: but being afterwards oblig'd to go to Ireland to suppress a Rebellion there, the People took advantage of it, and dethron'd him.

The Nation had fuch a Specimen in this Reign of a Standing Army, that I don't find any King from him to Charles the 1st, that attemted keeping up any Forces in time of Peace, except the Yeomen of the Guard. who were constituted by Henry the 7th: and tho there were feveral Armies raifed in that time for French, Scotch, Irish, other foren and domestic Wars; yet they were constantly difbanded as foon as the occasion was over. And in all the Wars of York and Lancaster, whatever Party prevail'd, we don't find they ever attemted to keep up a Standing Army. Such was the virtue of those times, that they would rather run the hazard of forfeiting their Heads and Estates to the rage of the opposit Party, than certainly inflave their Country, tho they themselves were to be the Tytants.

Nor would they fuffer our Kings to keep up an Army in Ireland, tho there were frequent Rebellions there, and by that means their Subjection very precarious; as well knowing they would be in England when called for. In the first three hundred Years that the English had possession of that Country, there were no Armies there but in times of War. The first Force that was establish'd was in the 14th of Edward the fourth, when 120 Archers on Horfeback, 40 Horfemen, and 40 Pages were establish'd by Parliament there; which fix years after were reduc'd to 80 Archers, and 20 Spearmen on Horseback. Afterwards in Henry the Eighth's time, in the year 1535, the Army in Ireland was 300:

and-

and in 1542, they were increased to 380 Horse, and 160 Foot, which was the Establishment then. I speak this of times of Peace: for when the Irish were in Rebellion, which was very frequent, the Armies were much more confiderable. In Queen Mary's time the Standing Forces were about 1200. In most of Queen Elizabeth's Reign the Irish were in open Rebellion; but when they were all suppress'd, the Army establish'd was between 1500 and 2000: about which number they continu'd till the Army rais'd by Strafford the 15th of Charles the 1/1.

In the Year 1602 dy'd Queen Elizabeth, and with her all the Virtue of the Plantagenets, and the Tudors. She made the English Glory found thro the whole Earth: She first taught her Country the advantages of Trade; let bounds to the Ambition of France and Spain; affisted the Dutch, but would neither permit them or France to build any great Ships; kept the Keys of the Rivers Maes and Scheld in her own hands; and died with an uncontrol'd Dominion of the Seas, and Arbitress of Christendom. All this she did with a Revenue not exceding 200000 pounds per annum; and had but inconsiderable Taxes from her People.

No fooner was King James come to the Crown, but all the Reputation we had acquir'd in her glorious Reign was eclips'd, and we became the form of all Nations about us, contemned even by that State we had created, who infulted us at Sea, feiz'd Amboyna, Poleroon, Seran, and other Places in the East-Indes, by which they ingross'd that most prositable Trade of Spices; fish'd upon our Coasts without raying the customary Tribute, and at the fame time prevail'd with the King to deliver up the Cautionary Towns of Brill, Ramekins, and Flushing, for a very small Confideration, tho there were near fix Millions Arrears. He fquandred the public Treafire, discountenanc'd all the great Men who were rais'd in the glorious Reign of his Predecessor, cut off Sir Walter Raleigh's Head, advanc'd Favorites of his own, Men of no Merit, to the highest Preferment; and to m line in their Profuseness, he granted them Monorolies, infinit Projects, prosituted Honors for Mony, rais'd Benevolences and Loans without Authority of Parliament. And when these Grievances were complain'd of there. he committed many of the principal Members without Bail or Mainprife, as he did afterwards for prefuming to address him against the Spanish Match. He pardon'd the Earl of Somerset and his Wife for Sir Thomas Overbury's Murder, after he had imprecated all the Curses of Heaven upon himself and his Posterity; and it was generally thought, because the Earl was Accessary to the poisoning Prince Henry. He permitted his Son-in-law to be ejected out of his Principalities, and the Protestant Interest to be run down in Germany and France, while he was bubled nine years together with the hopes of the Spanish March, and a great Fortune. Afterwards he made a dishonorable Treaty of Marriage with France, giving the Papists Liberty of Conscience: and indeed, as he often declared, he was no otherwise an Enemy to Popery, than for their deposing of Kings, and King-killing Doctrin. In Ireland he gave them all the Incouragement he durst; which Policy has bin follow'd by all his Successors fince to this present Reign, and has serv'd 'em to two purpofes: One is, by this they have had a pretence to keep up Standing Armies there to aw the Natives; and the other, that they might make use of the Natives against their English Subjects. In this Reign that ridiculous Doctrin of Kings being Jure Divino was coin'd, never before heard of even in the Easter 1 Tyrannies. The other parts of his Government had fuch a mixture of Scharamuchi and Harlequin, that they ought not to be spoken of seriously, as Proclamations upon every trifle, som against talking of News; Letters to the Parliament, telling them he was an old and wife King; that State Affairs were above their reach, and therfore they must not meddle with them, and such like Trumpery. But our happiness was, that this Prince was a great Coward, and hated the fight of a Soldier; so that he could not do much against us by open force. At last he died (as many have believed) by Poison, to make room for his Son Charles the First.

This King was a great Bigot, which made him the Darling of the Clergy; but having no great reach of his own, and being govern'd by the Priests (who have bin always unfortunat when they have meddled with Politics) with a true Ecclesiastic Fury he drove on to the destruction of all the Liberties of England. This King's whole Reign was one continued Act against the Laws. He dissolved his first Parliament for prefuming to inquire into his Father's Death, tho he loft a great Sum of Mony by it, which they had voted him: He entred at the same time into a War with France and Spain, upon the privat Piques of Buckingham, who managed them to the eternal Dithonor and Reproach of the English Nation; witness the ridiculous Enterprizes upon Cadiz and the Isle of Rhee. He deliver'd Pennington's Fleet into the French hands, betraved the poor Rochellers, and fuffered the Protestant Interest in France to be quite extirpated. He raised Loans, Excises, Coat and Conduct-mony, Tunnage and Poundage, Knighthood and Ship-mony, without Authority of Parliament; imposed new Oaths on the Subjects, to discover the value of their Estates; imprisoned great numbers of the most considerable Gentry and Merchants for not paying his Arbitrary Taxes; fom he fent beyond Sea, and the poorer fort he prest for Soldiers. He kept Soldiers upon free Quarter, and executed Martial Law upon them. He granted Monopolies without number, and broke the bounds of the Forests. He erected Arbitrary Courts, and inlarged others, as the High Commission-Court, the Star-Chamber, Court of Honor, Court of Requests, dec. and unspeakable Oppressions were committed in them, even to Men of the first Quality. He commanded the Earl of Briftol and Eishop of Lincoln not to com to Parliament; committed and profecuted a great many of the most eminent Members of the House of Commons for what they did there, fom for no cause at all, and would not let them have the benefit of Habeas Corpus; suspended and confined Arch-Bishop Abbot, because he would not license a Sermon that afferted Despotic Power, whatever other cause was pretended. He suspended the Bishop of Glocester, for refusing to swear never to consent to alter the Government of the Church; supported all his Arbitrary Ministers against the Parliament, telling them he wondred at the foolish Impudence of any one to think he would part with the meanest of his Servants upon their account: and indeed in his Speeches, or rather Menaces, he treated them like his Footmen, calling them Undutiful, Seditious, and Vipers. He brought unheard of Innovations into the Church; preferred Men of Arbitrary Principles, and inclinable to Popery, especially those Firebrands, Laud, Mountague, and Manwaring, one of whom had bin complain'd of in Parliament, another impeach'd for advancing Popery, and the third condemned in the House of Lords. He dispenfed with the Laws against Papists, and both incouraged and prefer'd them. He called no Parliament for twelve years together, and in that time governed as arbitrarily as the Grand Seignior. He abetted the Irish Massacre, as appears by their producing a Commission under the Great Seal of Scotland, by the Letter of Charles the 2d in favor of the Marquiss of Antrim, by his stopping the Succors that the Parliament sent to reduce Ireland fix months under the Walls of Chester, by his entring into a Treaty with the Rebels after he had ingaged his Faith to the Parliament to the contrary, and bringing over many thousands of them to fight against his People. It is endless to enumeratall the Oppressions of his Reign; but having no Army to support him, his Tyranny was precarious, and at last his Ruin. Tho he extorted great Sums from the People, yet it was with fo much difficulty, that it did him little good. Befides, he spent so much in foolish Wars and Expeditions, that he was always behind-hand; yet he often attemted to raife an Army.

Upon pretence of the Spanish and French Wars he rais'd many thousand Men, who liv'd upon free Quarter, and rob'd and destroy'd wherever they came. But being unsuccessful in his Wars abroad, and prest by the Clamors of the People at home, he was forc'd to disband 'em. In 1627 he sent over 30000 l. to Holland to raise 3000 German Horse, to force his arbitrary Taxes; but this matter taking wind, and being examin'd by the Parliament, Orders were fent to countermand them. In the 15th year of his Reign he gave a Commission to Strafford to raise 8000 Irish to be brought into England: but before they could get hither, the Scots were in Arms for the like Opprefsions, and marched into Northumberland, which forcing him to call a Parliament, prevented that defign, and fo that Army was disbanded. Soon after he rais'd an Army in England to oppose the Scots, and tamper'd with them to march to London, and dissolve the Parliament: but this Army being composed for the most part of the Militia, and the matter being communicated to the House, who immediatly fell on the Officers that were Members, as Ashburnham, Wilmot, Pollard, &c. the defign came to nothing. After this there was a Pacification between the King and the Scots; and in pursuance of it both Armies were disbanded. Then he went to Scotland, and indeavor'd to prevail with them to invade England; but that not doing, he fent a Meffage to the Parliament, defiring their concurrence in the raising 3000 Irish to be lent to the King of Spain; to which the Parliament refused to consent, believing he would make another use of them. When he came back to London, he pick'd out 3 or 400 dissolute Fellows out of Taverns, gaming and brothel-Houses, kept a Table for them; and with this goodly Guard all arm'd, he enter'd the House of Commons, fat down in the Speaker's Chair, demanding the delivery of 5 Members: But the Citizens coming down by Land and Water with Musquets upon their Shoulders to defend the Parliament, he attemted no fur-This fo inrag'd the House, that they chose a Guard to defend themselves against future Infults, and the King foon after left London. Som time before this began the Irish Rebellion, where the Irish pretended the King's Authority, and shew'd the Great Seal to justify themselves; which, whether true or falfe, raifed fuch a jealoufy in the People, that he was forced to confent to leave the management of that War to the Parliament: yet he afterwards fent a Message to them, telling them he would go to Ireland in Person; and acquainted them, that he had iffued out Commissions for raising 2000 Foot and 200 Horse in Cheshire for his Guard, which they protested against, and prevented it. By this we may see what Force was thought sufficient in his Reign to inslave the Nation, and the frequent Attemts to get it.

Then the Civil Wars broke out between him and his People, in which many bloody Battels were fought; two of the most considerable were those of Newbury and Naseby. both won by new Soldiers, the first by the London Militia, and the latter by an unexperienc'd Army, which the King used to call in derifion the New Nodel. And fom years after the Battel of Worcester was in a great meafure won by the Country Militia, for which Cromwel discharged them with anger and conteint, as knowing them Instruments unfit to promote his Tyrannical Defigns. At last by the fate of the War the King became a Prisoner, and the Parliament treated with him while in that condition, and at the same time voted that fom part of the Army should be disbanded, and others sent to Ireland to reduce that Kingdom; upon which the Army chofe Agitators among themselves, who prefented a Petition to both Houses, that they would proceed to fettle the Affairs of the Kingdom, and declare that no part of the Army should be disbanded till that was don. But finding their Petition refented, they fent and feized the King's Person from the Parliaments Commissioners, drew up a Charge of High Treason against eleven principal Members for indeavoring to disband the Army, entred into a privat Treaty with the King: but he not complying with their demands, they feized London; and notwithstanding the Parliament had voted the King's Concessions a ground for a future Settlement, they resolved to put him to Death, and in order therto purged the House, as they called it, that is, placed Guards upon them, and excluded all Members that were for agreeing with the King; and then they cut off, his Head.

After this they let the Parliament govern for five years, who made their Name famous thro the whole Earth, conquered their Enemies in England, Scotland and Ireland; reduced the Kingdom of Portugal to their own Terms; recovered our Reputation at Sea;

overcame the Dutch in several famous Battels; secured our Trade, and managed the public Expences with so much frugality, that no Estates were gained by privat Men upon the public Miseries; and at last were passing an Act for their own Dissolution, and settling the Nation in a free and impartial Commonwealth; of which the Army being afraid, thought it necessary to dissolve them, and accordingly Cromwel next day called two Files of Musqueteers into the House, and pulled the Speaker out of the Chair, behaving himself like a Madman, vilisying the Members, and calling one a Whoremaster, another a Drunkard, bidding the Soldiers take away that fools bauble the Mace;

and so good night to the Parliament. When they had don this Act of Violence, the Council of Officers fet up a new form of Government, and chose a certain number of Persons out of every County and City of England, Scotland and Ireland: and these they invested with the Supreme Power, but soon after expelled them, and then Cromwel fet up himself, and framed a new Instrument of Government by a Protector and a House of Commons, in pursuance of which he called a Parliament. But they not answering his Expectations, he excluded all that would not fubfcribe his Instrument; and those that remained, not proving for his purpose neither, he dissolved them with a great deal of opprobrious Language. He then divided England into several Districts or Divisions, and placed Major Generals or Intendents over them, who governed like fo many Bashaws, decimating the Cavaliers, and raising Taxes at their pleafure. Then for footh he had a mind to make himfelf King, and called another Parliament to that purpose, after his usual manner secluding fuch Members as he did not like. To this Assembly he offered another Instrument of Government, which was by a Representative of the People, a 2d House composed of 70 Members in the nature of a House of Lords, and a fingle Person; and left a Blank for what name he should be called, which this worthy Affembly filled up with that of King, addressed to Cromwel that he would be pleafed to accept it, and gave him power to nominat the Members of the Other House. This the great Officers of the Army referred, for it destroyed all their hopes of being Tyrants in their turn, and therefore addressed the Parliament against the Power and Government of a King, which made Cromweld decline that Title, and content himself with a greater Power under the name of Protector. Afterwards he named the Other House, as it was called, for the most part out of the Officers of the Army; but even this Parliament not pleasing him, he dissolved them in a fury, and govern'd the Nation without any Parliament at all till he died.

After his death the Army fet up his Son Richard, who called a new Parliament; but their proceedings being not agreable to the humor of the Soldiery, they forced the Protector to dissolve them: then they deposed him, and took the Power into their own hands; but being unable to weild it, they restored the Commonwealth, and soon after expelled them again, because they would not settle the Military Sword independent of the Civil: then they governed the Nation by a Council of War at Wallingford-House, and chose a Committee of Safety for the executive part of the Government; but that Whim lasted but a little time before they chose Confervators of Liberty; and that not doing neither, they agreed that every Regiment should choose two Representatives, and this worthy Council should settle the Nation; when they met, fomtimes they were for calling a new Parliament, somtimes for restoring the old, which was at last don. By this means all things fell into Confusion, which gave Monk an opportunity of marching into England where he acted his part fo dexteroufly, that he restor'd the King with part of that Army which had cut off his Father's Head.

This is a true and lively Example of a Government with an Army; an Army that was raifed in the cause, and for the sake of Liberty; composed for the most part of Men of Religion and Sobriety. If this Army could commit such Violences upon a Parliament always successful, that had acquired so much Reputation both at home and abroad, at a time when the whole People were trained in Arms, and the Pulse of the Nation beat high for Liberty; what are we to expect if in a future Age an ambitious Prince should arise with a dissolute and debauched Army, a statering Clergy, a prostitute Ministry, a Bankrupt House of L—ds, a Pensioner House of C—ns, and a slavish and corrupted Nation?

By this means came in Charles the Second, a luxurious and effeminat Prince, a deep Difsembler, and if not a Papist himself, yet a great favorer of them: but the People had fuffered so much from the Army, that he was received with the utmost Joy and Tran-The Parliament in the Honymoon passed what Laws he pleased, gave him a vast Revenue for life, being three times as much as any of his Predecessors ever enjoyed, and several Millions besides to be spent in his Plea-This made him conceive vafter hopes of Arbitrary Power than any that went before him; and in order to it he debauched and enervated the whole Kingdom: His Court was a scene of Adulteries, Drunkenness, and Irreligion, appearing more like Stews, or the Feasts of Bacchus, than the Family of a Chief Magistrate: and in a little time the Contagion spread thro the whole Nation, that it was out of the fashion not to be leud, and scandalous not to be a public Enemy: which has bin the occasion of all the Miseries that have fince happened, and I am afraid will not be extinguished but by our ruin. He was no sooner warm in his Seat, but he rejected an advantageous Treaty of Commerce which Oliver made with France, as don by a Usurper; fuffer'd the French to lay Impositions upon all our Goods, which amounted to a Prohibition, infomuch that they got a Million a year from us in the overbalance of Trade. He fold that important Fortress of Dunkirk, let the French seize St. Christophers and other places in North America.

He began a foolish and unjust War with the Dutch; and tho the Parliament gave him vast Sums to maintain it, yet he spent so much upon his Vices, that they got great advantages of us, and burnt our Fleet at Chatham. At last he made as dishonorable a Peace with them, as he had don a War; a perpetual Reproach to our Country, that our Reputation at Sea should be funk to so low an eb as to be baffled by that Nation, who but a few years before had fent a blank Paper to the Parliament, to prescribe to them what Laws they pleased. During this War the City of London was fired, not without violent suspicions that the Firebals were prepared at Whitehall. Soon after this he entred into the Triple Alliance to oppose the growing greatness of France, and received a great Sum from the Parliament to maintain it, which he made use of to break the same League; sent Mr. Coventry to Sweden to dissolve it; and entred into a strict Alliance with France, which was fealed with his Sifter's blood. In conjunction with them he made a new War upon Holland, to extirpate Liberty and the Protestant Religion; but knowing the Parliament were averse to the War, and would not support him in it, he attemted before any War declared to seize their Smyrna Fleet, shut up the Exchequer, and became so mean as to be a Pensioner to France, from whence his Predecessors with Swords in their hands had so often exacted Tribute. He not only suffered, but affisted them to arrive at that pitch of Greatness, which all Europe since has sufficiently felt and lamented. He sent over ten thousand Men to affist in subduing Flanders and Germany, by whose help they did several considerable Actions. He fent them Timber, Seamen, Ship-Carpenters, and Models, contrary to the Policy of all Nations; which rais'd their Naval Force to a degree almost equal to our own: and for their exercise, he suffered them to take multitudes of English Ships by their Privateers, without so much as demanding fatisfaction.

During this War he issued out a Declaration suspending the Penal Laws, which appears to be designed in favor of the Papists, by his directing a Bill afterwards to be stolen away out of the House of Lords, for indulging Protestant Dissenters, whom he perfecuted violently most of his Reign, while he both countenanced and preferred Papists, broke the Act of Settlement in Ireland, restored them to their Estates, issued forth a Proclamation giving the Papists liberty to inhabit in Corporations, and married the Duke of York not only to a Rapist, but one in the French Interest, notwithstanding the repeated Addresses of the Parliament to the contrary. was in this Reign that that curfed and detestable Policy was much improved of bribing Parliaments, by distributing all the great Imployments in England among them, and supplying the want of places with Grants of Lands and Mony. No Man could be preferred to any Imployment in Church or State, till he had declared himfelf an open Enemy to our Constitution, by afferting Despotic Power under that nonsensical Phrase of Passive Obedience, which was more preach'd up than all the Laws of God and Man. The Hellish Popish Plot was stifled, proved fince too true by fatal experience; and in the room of it Protestant ones were forged, and Men trapan'd into others, as the Meal-Tub, Fitz Harrn's, the Rye-House, Newmarket, and Black-Heath Plots: and by these Pretences, and the help of packt Judges and Turies, they butchered fom of the best Men in England, set immoderat Fines upon others, gave probable suspicion of cutting the Lord Esex's Throat: and to finish our destruction, they took away the Charters, as fast as they were able, of all the Corporations in England, that would not choose the Members prescribed them.

But he durst not have dreamt of all these Violations if he had not had an Army to justify them. He had thoughts at first of keeping up the Parliament-Army, which was feveral times in debate. But Chancellor Hyde prevailed upon him by this Argument, that they were a Body of Men that had cut off his Father's Head; that they had fet up and pulled down ten several forts of Government; and that it might be his own turn next. So that his fears prevailing over his ambition, he consented to disband them; but soon found how vain and abortive a thing Arbitrary Power would prove without an Army. He therfore try'd all ways to get one; and first he attemted it in Scotland, and by means of the Duke of Lauderdale, got an Act pasfed there, wherby the Kingdom of Scotland was obliged to raise 20000 Foot and 2000 Horse at his Majesty's Call, to march into any part of his Dominions; and this Law is in being at this day. Much about the same time he rais'd Guards in England (a thing unheard of before in our English Constitution) and by degrees increas'd them, till they became a formidable Army; for first they were but very few, but by adding infenfibly more Men to a Troop or Company, and then more Troops or Companies to a Regiment, before the second Dutch War he had multiplied them to near 5000 Men. He then began that War in conjunction with France, and the Parliament gave him two Millions and a half to maintain it, with part of which Mony he rais'd about 12000 Men, which were called the Black-Heath Army (appointing Marshal Schomberg to be their General, and Fitz Gerald an Irish Papist their Lieutenant-General) and pretended he rais'd them to attack Holland; but instead of using them to that purpose, he kept them encamped upon Black-Heath, hovering over the City of London, which put both the Parliament and City in fuch confusion, that the King was forced at last to disband them. But there were feveral accidents contributed to it: First the ill success he had in the War with the Duch, fuch Gallantries being not to be attemted but in the highest Raptures of Fortune: Next, the never to be forgotten Generosity of that great Man General Schomberg, whose mighty Genius scorn'd so ignoble an Action as to put Chains upon a free People: and last of all, the Army themselves mutini'd for want of pay: which added to the ill Humors that were then in the Nation, made the King willing to disband them. But at the. same time, contrary to the Articles of Peace with the Dutch, he continu'd ten thousand Men in the French Service, for the most part under Popish Officers, to be season'd there in flavish Principles, that they might be ready to execute any Commands when they were fent for over. The Parliament never mer, but they address'd the King to recal these Forces out of France, and disband them; and feveral times prepar'd Bills to that purpose, which the King always prevented by a Prorogation; but : but at last was prevail'd upon to issue forth a Proclamation to recal them, yet at the same time supply'd them with Recruits, incourag'd som to go voluntarily into that Service, and press'd, imprison'd, and carri'd over others by main Fotce: besides, he only disbanded the new rais'd Regiments, and not all them neither, for he kept up in England sive thousand eight hundred and ninety privat Men, besides Officers, which was his Esta-blithment in 1673. The King having two great defigns to carry on together, viz. Popery and Arbitrary Power, thought this Force not enough to do his Business effectually; and therefore cast about how to get a new Army, and took the most plausible way, which was pretending to enter into a War with France; and to that purpose sent Mr. Thyn to Holland, who made a strict League with the States: and immediatly upon it the King call'd the Parliament, who gave him 1200000 Pounds to enter into an actual War, with which Mony he rais'd an Army of between twenty and thirty thoufand Men within less than forty Days, and fent part of them to Flanders. At the same time he continued his Forces in France, and took a Sum of Mony from that King to affift him in making a privat Peace with Holland: So that instead of a War with France, the Parliament had given a great Sum to raife an Army to enflave themselves. But it happen'd about this time that the Popish Plot broke out, which put the Nation into fuch a Ferment, that there was no stemming the Tide; so that he was forc'd to call the Parliament, which met the 23d of October 78, who immediatly fell upon the Popish Plot and the Land Army. Besides, there were discover'd 57 Commissions granted to Papists to raise Men, counterfigned 7. Will-fon; for which, and faying that the King might keep Guards if he could pay them, he was committed to the Tower. This fo inrag'd the Parliament, that they immediatly proceded to the disbanding of the Army, and pafs'd an Act that all rais'd fince the 29th of September 77 should be disbanded, and gave the King 693388 pounds to pay off their Arrears, which he made use of to keep them up, and dissolv'd the Parliament; but soon after called another, which purfu'd the same Counfels, and pass'd'a second Act to disband the Army, gave a new Sum for doing it, directed it to be paid into the Chamber of London. appointed Commissioners of their own, and pass'd a Vote, That the continuance of any Standing Forces in this Nation other than the Militia, was illegal, and a great Grievance and Vexation to the People; fo that Army was disbanded. Besides this, they complain'd of the Forces that were in France, and addressed the King again to recal them, which had fom Effect; for he sent over no more Recruits, but suffered them to wear out by degrees. The Establishment upon the Dissolution of this Army, which was in the year 1679, were 5650 privat Soldiers, besides Officers. From this time he never agreed with his People, but dissolved three Parliaments following for inquiring into the Popish Plot: and in the three last years of his Reign called none at all. And to crown the Work, Tangier is demolished, and the Garison brought over, and placed in the most considerable Ports in England; which made the Establishment in 83 8482 privat Men, besides Officers. It's observable in this King's Reign, that there was not one Sessions but his Guards were attack'd, and never could get the least Countenance from Parliament; but to be even with them, the Court as much discountenanced the Militia, and never would fuffer it to be made useful. Thus we see the King husbanded a few Guards fo well, that in a imall number of years they grew to a formidable Army, notwithstanding all the endeavors of the Parliament to the contrary; fo difficult it is to prevent the growing of an Evil, that dos not receive a check in the beginning.

He increas'd the Establishment in Ireland to 7700 Men, Osicers included; whereas they never exceded in any former Reign 2000, when there was more occasion for them: the Irish not long before having bin intirely reduced by Cromwel, and could never have held up their Heads again without his Countenance. But the truth of it was, his Army was to support the Irish, and the fear of the Irish was to support his Army.

Towards the latter end of this Kine's Reig

Towards the latter end of this King's Reign the Nation had so intirely lost all sense of Liberty, that they grew fond of their Chains; and if his Brother would have fuffer'd him to have liv'd longer, or had followed his Example, by this time we had bin as great Slaves as in France. But it was God's great Mercy to us that he was made in another Mould, Imperious, Obstinat, and a Bigot, push'd on by the Counsels of France and Rome, and the violence of his own Nature; fo that he quickly run himself out of breath. foon as he came to the Crown, he feized the Cuftoms and Excise without Authority of Parliament: He pick'd out the Scum and Scandals of the Law to make Judges upon the Eench; and turned out all that would not facrifice their Oaths to his Ambition, by which he discharged the Lords out of the Tower, inflicted those barbarous Punishments on Dr. Oates, Mr. Johnson, &c. butchered many hundreds of Men in the West after they had bin trapan'd into a Confession by promife of pardon, murdered Cornish, got the Dispensing Power to be declared in Westminster-Hall, turned the Fellows of Magdalen-College out of their Freeholds to make way for a Seminary of Priests, and hanged Soldiers for running away from their Colors. erected the Ecclefiastical Commission, sufpended the Bishop of London, because he would not inflict the same Punishment upon Dr. Sharp for preaching against Popery. He closeted the Nobility and Gently, turned all out of Imployment that would not promife to repeal the Test, put in Popish Privy-Counfellors, Judges, Deputy-Lieutenants, and Justices of Peace; and to get all this confirmed by the shew of Parliament, he profeented the Work his Brother had begun in taking away Charters, and new modeled the Corporations by a fort of Vermin called Regulators. He received a Nuntio from Rome, and sent an Ambassador thither. He crected a Popish Seminary at the Savoy to pervert Youth, fuffered the Priefts to go about in their Habits, made Tyrconnel Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, turned all the Protestants out of the Army and most of the Civil Imployments there, and made Fitton (a Papist, and one detected for Perjury) Chancellor of that Kingdom. He issued out a Proclamation in Scotland, wherin he afferted his Absolute Power, which all his Subjects were to obey without referve; a Prerogative, I think, never claimed by the Great Turk, or the Mogul. He issued out a Declaration for Liberty of Confeience, ordered it to be read in all Churches, and imprisoned and tried the seven Bishops because they humbly offered their Reasons in a Petition against it: and to consummat all, that we might have no hopes of retrieving our Missortunes, he imposed a counterfeir

Prince of Wales upon the Nation.

Soon after he came to the Crown, the Duke of Monmouth landed, and in a few weeks got together fix or feven thousand Men: but they having neither Arms or Provisions, were easily defeated by not many more than 2000 of the King's Troops. Which leaves a fad prospect of the consequence of a Standing Army: for here was a Prince, the Darling of the common People, fighting against a bigotted Papist that was hated and abhorred by them, and yet defeated by fo small a number of Men. and many of them too his Friends; such is the force of Authority. King James took occasion from hence to increase his Army to between fifteen and fixteen thousand Men, and then unmask'd himself, called his Parliament, and in a haughty Speech told them, He had increas'd his Army, put in Officers not qualified by the Test, and that he would not part with them. He asked a Supply, and let them know he expected their compliance. This was very unexpected to those Loyal Gentlemen, who had given him fuch a vast Revenue for Life, who refused to take any Security but his Majesty's never-failing Word for the Protestant Religion, and indeed had don for him whatever he asked; which yet was not very extraordinary, fince he had the choosing of most of them himself. But even this Parliament turn'd short upon an Army: which puts me in mind of a faying of Macchiavel, viz. That it is as hard a matter for a Man to be perfectly bad as perfectly good; tho if he had lived at this time, I believe he had changed his Opinion. The Court labor'd the matter very much; and to thew that good Wits jump, they told us that France was grown formidable, that the Dutch Forces were much increas'd, that we must be strong in proportion for the preservation of our selves and Flanders, and that there was no dependence upon the Militia. But this shallow Rhetoric would not pass upon them. They answer'd, that we had defended our selves for above a thousand years without an Army; that a King's truest Strength is the Love of his People; that they would make the Militia useful, and ordered a Bill to be brought in to that purpose. But all this ferved only to fulfil their Iniquity; for they had don their own Business before, and now he would keep an Army up in spite of them: To he prorogu'd them, and call'd no other Parliament during his Reign; but to frighten the City of London, kept his Army encamped at Hounstow Heath when the Season would permit, which put not only them but the whole Nation into the utmost Terror and Confusion. Towards the latter end of his Reign he had increased his Army in England to above twenty thousand Men, and in Ireland to eight thoufand feven hundred and odd.

Court

This King committed two fatal Errors in his Politicks. The first was his falling out with his old Chronies the Priests, who brought him to the Crown in spite of his Religion, and would have supported him in Arbitrary Government to the utmost; nay, Popery (especially the worst part of it, viz. the Domination of the Church) was not fo formidable a thing to them, but with a little Cookery it might have bin rendred palatable. But he had Priests of another fort that were to rife upon their Ruins; and he thought to play an eafier Game by careffing the Diffenters, imploying them, and giving them Liberty of Conscience: which kindness lookt so preposterous, that the wife and sober Men among them could never heartily believe it, and when the Prince of Orange landed, turn'd against him.

His fecond Error was the difobliging his own Army, by bringing over Regiments from Ireland, and ordering every Company to take in 10 many Irish Papists; by which they plainly faw he was reforming his Army, and would cashire them all as fast as he could get Papists to supply their room. So that he violated the Rights of the People, fell out with the Church of England, made uncertain Friends of the Dissenters, and disoblig'd his own Army; by which means they all united against him, and invited the Prince of Orange to affift them: which Invitation he accepted, and landed at Torbay the 5th of November 1688. publishing a Declaration, which fet forth all the Oppressions of the last Reign [but the keeping up a Standing Army declared for a free Parliament, in which things were to be so settled that there should be no danger of falling again into Slavery, and promised to send back all his foren Forces as foon as this was don.

When the News of his Landing was spread thro England, he was welcom'd by the universal Acclamations of the People. He had the Hands, the Hearts, and the Prayers of all honest Men in the Nation: Every one thought the long wish'd for time of their Deliverance was com. King James was deferted by his own Family, his Court, and his Army. Ground he stood upon mouldred under him; so that he fent his Queen and Foundling to France before him, and himself followed foon after. When the Prince came to London, he disbanded most of those Regiments that were raised from the time he landed; and King James's Army that were disbanded by Feversham, were order'd to repair all again to their Colors: which was thought by fom a false step, believing it would have bin more our Interest to have kept those Regiments which came in upon the Principle on which this Revolution is founded, than Forces that were raifed in violation of the Laws, and to support a Tyrannical Government: besides, the miserable Condition of Ireland required our freedy Affistance, and these Men might have bin trusted to do that work.

Within a few days after he came to Town, she fummoned the Lords, and not long after the Members of the three last Parliaments of King Charles the 2d, and was addressed to

by

by both Houses to take upon him the Administration of the Government, to take into his particular care the then present Condition of Ireland, and to issue forth Circulatory Letters for the choosing a Convention of Estates. All this time Ireland lay bleeding, and Tyrconnel was raising an Army, disarming the Protestants. and dispossessing them of all the Places they held in Leinster, Munster, and Connaught: which occasioned frequent Applications here for Relief, tho it was to fend them but one or two Regiments; and if that could not be don, to fend them Arms and Commissions, which in all probability would have made the Reduction of that Kingdom very easy: yet tho the Prince's and King James his Army were both in England, no Relief was fent, by which means the Irish got possession of the whole Kingdom but Londonderry and Inniskilling, the former of which Towns shut up its Gates the ninth of December, declaring for the Prince of Orange, and addressed for immediat Relief, yet could neither get Arms or Ammunition till the 20th of March; and the Forces that were fent with Cunningham and Richards arrived not there till the 15th of April, and immediatly after deferted the Service, and came back again, bringing Lundy the Governor before appointed by his Majesty with them, and alledg'd for their excuse, that it was impossible to defend the Town. But notwithstanding this Treachery, such was the Refolution of the Besieged, that they continued to defend themselves with the utmost bravery, and sent again for Relief, which under Kirk came not to them till the 7th of Tune: nor were these poor Creatures actually relieved till the 30th of July, tho there appears no reason why he might not have don it when he first came into the Harbor, which was more than feven Weeks before. we see the Resolution of these poor Men wearied out all their Disappointments.

When the Convention met, they refolv'd upon twenty eight Articles, as the Preliminaries upon which they would dispose the Crown; but this design dwindled into a Declaration of our Rights, which was in thirteen Articles, and the most considerable, viz. That the raising and keeping up a Standing Army in times of Peace is contrary to Law, had tag'd to it these words, without Authority of Parliament; as if the consent of the Parliament would not have made it legal without those words, or that their Consent would make it less dangerous. This made the Facobites say in those early days, that som evil Counsellors defigned to play the same game again of a Standing Army, and attributed unjustly the neglect of Ireland to the same Cause, because by that omission it was made necessary to raise a greater Army to reduce it, with which the King acquainted the Parliament the 8th of March, when, speaking of the deplorable Condition of Ireland, he declared he thought it not advisable to attemt the reducing it with less than 20000 Horse and Foot. This was a bitter Pill to the Parliament, who thought they might have managed their share of the War with France at Sea; but there was no remedy, a greater Army must be raised, or Ireland lost: and to gild it, all the Courtiers usher'd in their Speeches with this Declaration, That they would be the first for disbanding them when the War was over; and this Declaration has bin made as often as an Army has bin debated fince during the War, and I suppose punctually observed last Sessions. At last the thing was consented to, and the King issu'd forth Commissions for the raising of Horse, Foot, and Dragoons. In this Army very few Gentlemen of Estates in Ireland could get Imployments, tho they were in a miferable Condition here, and made their utmost Application for them; it being a common objection by som Colonels, that a Man had an Estate there, which in all likelihood would have made him more vigorous in reducing the Kingdom. It was long after this Army was raifed, before they could be ready to be transported; and even then it was commonly faid that Schomberg found many things out of order: and when they were at last transported, which was about the middle of August. they were not in a condition to fight the Enemy, tho lately baffled before Londonderry, especially their Carriages coming not to them till the 24th of September, when it was high time to go into Winter-quarters. By this means the Irish got Strength and Courage, and three fourths fourths of our Army perish'd at the Camp at Dundalk.

But the our Army could do nothing, yet the Militia of the Country, almost without Arms or Clothes, performed Miracles, witness that memorable Siege of Londonderry, the defeat of General Mackarty, who was intrench'd in a Bog with ten thousand regular Troops, and attack'd by fifteen hundred Innukilling Men, defeated, himself made a Prisoner, and three thousand of his Menkill'd; and a great many other gallant Actions they perform'd, for which they were dismiss'd by Kirk with Scorn and Ignominy, and most of their Officers left to starve. Thus the War in Ireland was nurs'd up either thro Chance, Inadvertency, or the necessity of our Affairs (for I am unwilling to think it was Delign) till at last it was grown so big, that nothing less than his Majesty's great Genius, and the usual Success that has always attended his Conduct, could have overcom it.

When the Parliament met that Winter, they fell upon the examination of the Irish Affairs; and finding Commistary Shales was the cause of a great part of the Miscarriages, they address'd his Majesty that he would be pleased to acquaint the House who it was that advised the imploying him, which his Majesty did not remember. They then addreffed, that he would be pleased to order him to be taken into Custody, and it was don accordingly; upon which Shales fent a Letter to the Speaker, defiring he might be brought over to England, where he would vindicat himself, and justify what he had don. Then the House addressed his Majesty again, that he might be brought over with all convenient speed; and the King was pleased to answer, that he had given fuch Orders already. Then the House refer'd the matter to a privat Committee; but before any Report made, or Shales could be brought to England, the Parliament was prorogu'd, and after disfolv'd; and foon after he fell fick and died.

The neglect of Ireland this year made it necessary to raise more Forces, and increase our Establishment, which afterwards upon pretence of invading France was advanc'd to eighty feven thousand fix hundred ninety eight Men. At last by our great Armies and Fleets, and the confrant expence of maintaining them, we were too hard for the Occonomy, Skill, and Policy of France; and notwithstanding all our Di Sculties, brought them to Terms both safe and honorable.

It not being to the purpose of this Discourse, I shall omit giving any account of the Conduct of our Fleet during this War, how few Advantages we reap'd by it, and how many Opportunities we lost of destroying the French. Only thus much I will observe, that tho a great part of it may be attributed to the Negligence, Ignorance, or Treachery of inferior Officers, yet it could not so universally happen thro the whole course of the War, and unpunish'd too, notwithstanding the Clamors of the Merchants, and repeated Complaints in Parliament, unless the cause had laid deeper: What that is, I shall not presume to inquire; but I am fure there has bin a very ill Argument drawn from it, viz. That a Fleet is no Security to us.

As foon as the Peace was made, his Majesty discharged a great part of the foren Forces; and an Advertisement was published in the Gazet, that ten Regiments should be forthwith disbanded; and we were told, as foon as it was don, that more should follow their example. But these Resolutions, it seems, were altered, and the modifh Language was, that we must keep up a Standing Army. Their Arguments were turn'd topfy turvy: for as during the War the People were prevail'd upon to keep up the Army in hopes of a Peace; so now we must keep them up for fear of a War. The Condition of France, which they had bin decrying for many years, was now magnify'd: we were told, that it was doubtful whether the French King would deliver up any of his Towns; that he was preparing a vast Fleet upon the Lord knows what defign; that it was impossible to make a Militia useful; that the warlike King Jemmy had an Army of eighteen thousand Irish Heros in France, who would be ready when called for; and that the King of Spain was dying. The Members of Parliament were difcourfed with as they came to Town; 'twas whisper'd about, that the Whigs would be all turned out of Imployments: a new Plot was faid to be discovered for murdering the King, and searches were made at Midnight thro the whole City, to the discovery of plenty of Fornication, but no Traitors. The Placemongers consulted among themselves, and found by a wonderful Sympathy they were all of one Opinion; and if by any means they could get a few more to be of the same, the day was their own: so they were positive of success, and very sure they should carry it by above a hundred Voices.

The House had not fat a week, but this matter came to be debated; and the question in the Committee was, Whether all Forces raised since the year 80 should be disbanded? which was carried in the Affirmative, the Court being not able to bring it to a division; and the next day when it was reported. they did not attemt to fet afide the Vote, but to recommit it, upon pretence it tied the King to the old Tory Regiments, (tho by the way, none of those Regiments have bin fince disbanded) and fom faid they thought the Forces in 80 too many. I can fafely fay, tho I had frequent Discourse with many of them, vet I never heard any one of them at that time pretend to be for a greater force than this Vote left the King: but let what will be their reasons, it was carried against them by a majority of 37, the Affirmatives being 185, and the Negatives 148. I will not here take notice of what fom People have faid, viz. That of the 148 who were for recommitting the Vote, 116 had Places, because I doubt the fact: nor do I believe their Places would biass them.

This was a thorow Victory, and required great Skill and Address to retrieve. The fears of France were again multiplied: 'twas said there was a privat Article that King James was to leave France, which the French refused to perform; that Boufflers and the Earl of Portland had given one another the Lie; that som of the latter's Retinue had bin killed: that the French Ambassador was stop'd, the King of Spain dead, and abundance more to this purpose. The Club was set up at the R——, great Applications made, the Commission of the Excise was declared to be broke

(by which nine Commissioners Places were to be disposed of, and above 40 Persons named for them) and many of the Country Gentlemen were gon home. Thus recruited, they were ready for a new Encounter: and fince by the Rules of the House they could not set. afide the former Vote directly, they would try to do it by a fide Wind; which was by moving, that Directions might be given to the Committee of Ways and Means to confider of a supply for Guards and Garisons: but the other fide, to obviat this, offered these words as an Amendment, viz. According to the Vote of the 11th of December. This matter was much labored, and the Gentlemen that were against the Army explain'd themselves, and declared they were not for obliging the King to the Regiments in 80, but that they infifted only on the number, and he might choose what Regiments he pleased. By this means they carried it, but not without great oppofition (tho I prefume from none of those Gentlemen who declared in all Places they were for recommitting the former Vote only for the Reasons before given) besides, they were forced to explain themselves out of a confiderable part of it, for they allowed the King the Dutch Regiments, and the Tangeriners; which in my opinion could not be well understood by the former Vote, the meaning of which feems to be, that the King should have all the Forces that Charles the 2d had in 80 in England, and these were not then here; the Holland Regiments being paid by the States, and their Soldiers; and the others 500 Leagues off at Tangier. But all this advantage would not fatisfy the Army-Gentlemen: for in the Committee they indeavored again to fet afide the Vote, by moving for a fum of 500000 pounds per annum for Guards and Garifons, without naming any certain number (which would have maintained above 20000) but this could not be carried; therfore they came to a fort of Composition, to have but 10000, wherof a great number were to be Horse and Dragoons; and the Sum given to maintain them was 250000 pounds: but notwithstanding this they moved afterwards for three thousand Marines (alledging that these were not a Land-C 2 Force.

Force, but a Water-Force) which was carried.

Here I will beg leave to observe one thing, that nothing would fatisfy the Courtiers at the beginning of the Winter but to have the Forces establish'd by the Parliament, and upon other Terms they would not accept them; and in all Companys faid, that any Minister that advis'd the King to keep them up otherwife, or any Officer that continued his Commission ought to be attainted of High Treafon: about which I shall not differ with these Gentlemen, nor do I arraign them for altering their opinion; for perhaps they may conceive that a Vote to give 350000 pounds for Guards and Garisons, is a sufficient Authority against Law to quarter Soldiers in all parts of England, as well out of Garifons as in 'em, and as well at a distance from the King's Person, as about it.

Thus what our Courts for above a thouland years together had never Effrontery enough to ask: what the Penfioner Parliament could not think of without aftonishment; what King Fames's Parliament (that was almost chofen by himself) could not hear debated with patience, we are likely to have the honor of establishing in our own age, even under a Deliverance.

Now we will examin how far they have complied with the Resolutions of the Honse of Commons. Having fo far gained upon the first Vote by the means before related, 'twas not eafy to be imagined but they would nicely perform the rest, without any art or evafion; but instead of this, they reform'd a certain number out of every Troop and Company, and kept up all the Officers, who are the most essential and chargeable part of an Army, the privat Soldiers being to be rais'd again in a few days whenever they pleafe. fuch a disbanding as every Officer would have made in his Company for his privat advantage, and always did in Charles the 2d's time, and even in this Reign when they were not in action: fo that all the effect of fuch a Reform is to hinder the Officers from false Musters, and fave the pay of a few common Soldiers.

But this would not fatisfy the People, and therefore they disbanded fom Regiments of Horse, Foot and Dragoons, and thought of that profound Expedient of fending a great many more to Ireland; as if our grievance was not the fear of being enflav'd by them. but lest they should spend their Mony among I am forry the Nation is grown fo contemtible in these Gentlemens opinions, as to think that they can remove our fears of a Standing Army by fending them threefcore miles off, from whence they may recal them: upon a few days notice. Nay an Army kept in Ireland, is more dangerous to us than at home: for here by perpetual converse with their Relations and Acquaintance, fom few of them perhaps may warp towards their Country; wheras in Ireland they are kept as itwere in a Garison, where they are thut up from the communication of their Countrymen, and may be nurs'd up in another Interest. This is so true, that 'tis a common Policy among Arbitrary Princes often to shife their Soldiers Quarters, lest they should contract friendship among the Natives, and by degrees fall into their Interest.

It may be said perhaps, That the People of Ireland will pay them; which makes the matter so much the worse, for they are less likely to have any regard to their Country. Besides, if we consider the Lords Justices Speech to that Parliament, wherin they are let know that his Majesty EXPECTS that they will continue the Subfiftence to the difbanded Officers, and support the present Establishment (which by the way is near three times as great as Charles the 2d's) and this without any other ceremony or qualification of Time (with which his Majesty was pleas'd to express himself to his English and Scotch Parliaments) we may be convine'd that they are not in a condition to dispute this matter; especially at a time when they apprehend Hardships will be put upon them in relation to their Trade: and therfore we may be fure they will gratify the Court to the utmost of their Power, in hopes, if they can't prevent the paffing a Law against them, to obtain a connivance in the execution. may add; by this means they will keep their Mony in their own Country, a great part whereof came formerly to England, and have an opportunity of returning the Complement we defign'd them last Year, if we don't prevent it by disbanding the Army there, as Strafford's Army in Ireland was formerly in the 15th of Charles the first, and lately another in 78 by our English Parliaments.

I can't avoid taking notice here, how different the modifh Sentiments are in Ireland and England: for there the Language is, We must comply with the Court in keeping up the Army, or otherwise the Woollen Manufacture is gon; and here the Men in fashion tell us, that an Army must be kept in Ireland to destroy the Woollen Manufacture, and execute the Laws we make against them; and in order to it the People of Ireland are to pay them.

This project of fending Men to Ireland was fo transparent, that they durst not rely upon it; and therfore they told us, that as fast as Mony could be got, they would disband more Regiments. The People were in great expectation, when it would be don, and feveral times it was taken notice of in Parliament; and the Courtiers always affur'd them that nothing hindred it but the want of Mony to pay them off. 'Twas confidently faid in all publick places, that eighteen Regiments more would be disbanded, and the Regiments were nam'd; and I have heard it with great Affurance affirm'd by the Agents and Officers themfelves, that the King had fign'd it in Council. Thus the Session was worn out, till the House of Commons tir'd with Expectation, address'd his Majesty, That he would be pleas'd to give order that a List be laid before the House of the Army disbanded, and intended to be disbanded, and of the Officers Names who are to have half pay; and his Majesty was pleas'd to answer, That he would comply with the desires of the House as soon as conveniently he could: but the Parliament fitting not above a Month afterwards, his Majesty sent them no farther An-

At last the Parliament rose, and instead of disbanding they brought over a great many foren Regiments, and sent them to Ireland, as well as three more English ones. But even all this would not bring their Army in England down to ten thousand Men; so that they made another Reform, and fince have incorporated the Officers of the disbanded Regiments in Ireland into the Standing Troops, by which means they have got an Army of Officers: whereas if these Gentlemen defign their Army to defend us against a sudden Invasion, or to be in readiness against the King of Spain's Death, in my poor opinion they should have kept up the privat Soldiers, and disbanded all the Officers but fuch as are just necessary to exercise them; for Officers will be always ready to accept good Imployments, whereas the privat Soldiers will be very difficultly lifted again in a new War, tho we all know they are easily to be got together when they are only to infult their Countrymen.

One good effect of this Army has already appear'd; for I prefume every body has heard how prevailing an Argument it was in the late Elections, That if we choose such a Man, we shall be free from Quarters: and I wish this Argument dos not every day grow stronger. Nay, who knows but in another Reign the Corporations may be told that his Majesty expects they will choose the Officers of the Army, and the Parliament be told that he expells they will maintain them?

But to set this matter in a full view, I will here put down the Establishment of King Charles the Second in 88, which was the soundation of the Vote of the 11th of December, as also his present Majesty's: and in this, as well as my other Computations, I do not pretend but I may be mistaken in many Pareticulars, tho I have taken what care I could not to be so; nor is it material to my purpose, so the variation from Truth is not considerable.

I shall also set down King William's Establishment as the Regiments were before the Reform, because all the Officers still remain, and a great part of the privat Soldiers, which I take to be in effect still Regiments; the rest being to be rais'd again in a few days, if they are design'd for home Service, but, as I said before, the hardest to be got if they are designed for Spain or Flanders. But herein if any Man differs from me, he may make his own deductions.

I have not here put down the Garison of Tangier, which was about three thousand Men, because that place is now lost, and confequently wants no Garison.

I will now set down his present Majesty's Establishment, and then compare them both together.

So that his present Majesty in England and Ireland alone has above three times as many Troops and Companies as Charles the Second had in the year eighty, almost sive times as many Commission Officers, near four times as many Non-Commission Officers; and when the Commanders shall have Orders to recruit their Companies, will have more than three times the number of common Soldiers, befides the disbanded Officers which are not incorporated into other Regiments; and upon the Establishment they now stand, are as much Creatures to the Court, as if their Regiments were in being.

These Forces are as they are now reduc'd and allow'd by the Parliament of Scotland, for Reasons best known to themselves, which without doubt must be very good ones: and 'tis commonly said, that ten Privy Counsellors of that Kingdom, who appear'd against the Army, are turn'd out of the Council', which, if true, I prefume will be a fufficient warning to our Gentlemen at home.

However, there is this use in the Scotch Army, that if the Parliament of England shall be prevailed on to think any Forces necessary, a lesser Number will be sufficient.

Of these seven thousand, eight hundred, and seventy seven are Foreigners, which is the first foreign Army that ever set foot in England but as Enemies.

Since the writing of this I am informed, that Brudenall's Regiment is in being, and that Eppinger's Dragoons are in English Pay; which if true, will make the whole Army fixty odd thousand Men: but in this as, well as many other parts of the List I may be mistaken, for which I hope I shall be excused, when I acquaint the Reader that I was forced to pick it out from accidental Discourses with Officers, having apply'd to my Lord R---'s Office without Success, tho I made fuch Interest for it as upon another occasion would not have bin refused.

If the Prince of Orange in his Declaration, instead of telling us that we should be settled upon fuch a foundation that there should be no danger of our falling again into Slavery, and that he would fend back all his Forces as foon as that was done, had promis'd us that after an eight years War (which should leave us in Debt near twenty Millions) we should have a Standing Army established, a great many of which should be Foreigners, I believe few Men would have thought fuch a Revolution worth the hazard of their Lives and Estates: but his mighty Soul was above fuch abject thoughts as these; his Declaration was his own, these paltry Designs are our Undertakers, who would shelter their own Oppressions under his Sacred Name.

I would willingly know whether the late King James could have inflaved us but by an Army, and whether there is any way of fecuring us from falling again into Slavery but by disbanding them. It was in that fenfé I understood his Majesty's Declaration, and therfore did early take up Arms for him, as I shall be always ready to do. It was this alone which made his affiftance necessary to us, otherwise we had wanted none but the Hangman's.

I will venture to fay, that if this Army dos not make us. Slaves, we are the only People upon Earth in fuch Circumstances that ever escap'd it with the 4th part of their number. It is a greater force than Alexander conquer'd the East with, than Casar had in his Conquest of Gaul, or indeed the whole Roman Empire; double the number that any of our Ancestors ever invaded France with, Agesilans the Perfians, or Huniades and Scanderbeg the Turkish Empire; as many again as was in any Battel between the Dutch and Spaniards in forty years War, or between the King and Parliament in England; four times as many as the Prince of Orange landed with in England; and in short, as many as have bin on both fides in nine Battels of ten that were ever fought in the World. If this Army dos not inflave us, it is barely because we have a virtuous Prince that will not attemt it; and 'tis a most miserable thing to have no other Security for our Liberty, than the Will of-a-Man, tho the most just Man living: for that. is not a free Government where there is a good Prince (for even the most arbitrary Governments have had fomtimes a Relaxation of their Miseries) but where it is so constituted, that no one can be a Tyrant if we would. Cicero fays, tho a Mafter dos not tyrannize, yet 'tis a lamentable confideration that it is in his power to do fo; and therfore such a Power is to be trusted to none, which if it dos not find a Tyrant, commonly makes one; and if not him, to be fure a Successor.

If any one during the Reign of Charles the Second, when those that were called Whigs, with a noble Spirit of Liberty, both in the Parliament House and in private Companies, opposed a few Guards as Badges of Tyranny, a Destruction to our Constitution, and the Foundations of a Standing Army: I fay, if any should have told them that a Deliverer should com and rescue them from the Oppressions under which they then labored; that France by a tedious and confumtive War should be reduced to half the Power it then had; and even at that time they should not only be passive, but use their utmost Interest, and distort their Reason to find out Arguments for keeping up so vast an Army, and make the Abuses of which they had bin all their lives complaining, Precedents to justify those Procedings; whoever would have told them this, must have bin very regardless of his Reputation, and bin thought to have had a great deal of ill nature. But the truth is, we have lived in an age of Miracles, and there is nothing fo extravagant that we may not expect to fee, when furly Patriots grow fervil Flatterers, old Commonwealthsmen declare for the Prerogative, and Admirals against the Fleet.

But I wonder what Arguments in nature our Hirelings will think of for keeping up an Army this year. Good Reasons lie within a narrow Compass, and might be guessed at; but Nonfense is infinit. The Arguments they chiefly infifted upon last year were, That it was uncertain whether the French King would deliver up any of his Towns if we disbanded our Army; that King James had 18000 Men at his devotion kept by the King of France; that a great Fleet was preparing there upon fom unknown Defign; that the King of Spain was dying; that there was no Militia settled; and that they would keep them up only for a year to fee how the World went. This with a few Lies about my. Lord Portland's and Boufflers's quarrelling, and fom Prophecies of our being invaded in fix months, was the substance of what was said or printed.

Now in fact the French King has delivered up Giron, Roses, Belver, Barcelona, and a great part of the Province of Catalonia: The Town and Province of Luxemburg, and the County of Chiny; the Towns of Mons, Charleroy, Courtray, and Aeth in the Spanish Provinces, to the King of Spain.

The Town of Dinant to the Bishop of Leige.

The Towns of Pignerol, Cazal, Sufa, Montmelian, Nice, Villa Franca, all Savoy, and part of Piemont to the Duke of Savoy.

The Cities of Treves, Germenskeim, and the Palatinat; the County of Spanheim, Veldentz, and Dutchy of Deuxponts; the County of Mombelliand, and som Possessions of Burgundy; the Forts of Kiel, Friburg, St. Peterfort, Desloile; the Town of Philipsburg, and most of Alsace, Eberenburg, and the Dutchy of Lorrain to the Empire: has demolished Hunningen, Montroyal and Kernburg.

He has delivered up the Principality of Orange to the King of England.

These are vast Countries, and contain in bigness as much ground as the Kingdom of England, and maintained the King of France above 100000 Men; besides, he had laid out vast Sums in the Fortifications he delivered up and demolished. Add to this, his Kingdom is miserably impoverished and depopulated by this War; his Manusactures much impaired; great numbers of Offices have bin erected, which like Leeches draw away the Peoples Blood; prodigious Debts contracted, and a most beneficial Trade with England lost. These things being considered, there can be little danger of their shewing overmuch wantonness, especially for som years: and yet still we must be bullied by the name of France, and the sear of it must do what their Power could never yet effect: which is a little too gross, considering they were inslaved by the same means. For in Lewis the 11th's time, the French gave up their Liberties for sear of England, and now we must give up ours for fear of France.

Secondly, Most of Ring James's English and Irish Forces which we have bin so often threatned with, are disbanded; and he is said to subsist upon his Majesty's Charity, which will be a sufficient Caution for his good behaviour.

Thirdly, The French Fleet, which was another Bugbear, exceded not this year 20 Sail, nor attemted any thing, tho we had no Fleet out to oppose them.

Fourthly, The King of Spain is not dead, nor in a more dangerous condition than he has bin for fom years; and we are not without hopes that his Majesty by his extraordinary Prudence has taken such care as to prevent a new War in case he should die.

Fifthly, As to the Militia, I suppose every Man is now fatisfied that we must never expect to fee it made useful till we have difbanded the Army. I would not be here understood to throw the whole odium of that matter upon the Court; for there are feveral other Parties in England, that are not over-zealous for a Militia. First, those who are for restoring King Fames's Trumpery, and would have the Army disbanded, and no Force fettled in the room of it. Next, there are a mungrel fort of Men who are not direct Enemies to the King; yet because their fancied Merit is not rewarded at their own price, they are so shagreen that they will not let him have the Reputation of fo noble an Establishment. Besides these, there are others that having no notion of any Militia but our own, and being utterly unacquainted with antient and modern History, think it impracticable: and fom wretched things are against it because of the Charge; wheras if their Mothers had taught them to cast account, they would have found out that 52000 Men for a month will be but the fame charge to the Subject as four thousand for a year, supposing the pay to be the same; and reckoning it to be a third part greater, it will be equivalent to the charge of 6000: and if we should allow them to be out a fortnight longer than was defigned by the last Bill for exercifing in lesser Bodies, then the utmost Charge of such a Militia will be no more than to keep up 9000 Men the year round. None of the Parties I mentioned will openly oppose a Militia. tho they would be all glad to drop is: and I believe no body will be fo hardy as to deny, but if the Court would shew as much vigor in profecuting it, as they did last year to keep up a Standing Army, that a Bill would pass; which they will certainly do if we disband the Army, and they think it neceffary; and if they do not, we have no reason to think an Army so. When they tell us we may be invaded in the mean time, they are not in earnest; for we all know if the King of France has any defigns, they look another way: besides, he has provided no Transports, nor is in any readiness to make an Invasion: and if he was, we have a Fleet to hinder him; nay, even the Militia we have in London and som other Counties, are moderatly exercis'd: and I believe those who speak most contemtibly of them will allow 'em to have natural Courage, and as good Limbs as other People; and if they will allow nothing else, then here is an Army of a hundred or fixicore thousand Men, ready listed, regimented, horsed and armed: and if there should be any occasion, his Majesty can put what Officers he pleases of the old Army overthem, and the Parliament will be fitting to give him what Powers shall be necessary. may add to this, that the disbanded Soldiers. in all probability will be part of this body; and then what fear can there be of a scambling Invafion of a few Men?

I have avoided in this place difcourfing of the nature of Militias, that Subject having bin to fully handled already; only thus much I will observe, that a Standing Army in Peace will grow more effeminat by living diffolutely in Quarters, than a Militia that for the most part will be exercised with hard labor. So that upon the whole matter, a Standing Army in Peace will be worse than a Militia; and in War a Militia wlll soon becom a disciplin'd Army.

Sixthly, The Army has bin kept up for a Year, which is all was pretended to; and notwithstanding their Prophecies, we have had no Invasion, nor danger of one.

Lastly, The Earl of Portland and Marshal Bousslers were so far from quarrelling, that perhaps no English Ambassador was ever received in France with more Honor.

But further, there is a Crifis in all Affairs, which when once loft, is never to be retrieved. Several Accidents concur to make the disbanding the Army practicable now, which may not happen again. We have a new Parliament, uncorrupted by the Intrigues of the Courtiers: besides, the Soldiers themfelves hitherto have known little but the Fatigues of a War, and have bin so paid since, that the privat Men would be glad to be difbanded; and the Officers would not be very uneafy at it, confidering they are to have half Pay, which we must not expect from them hereafter when they have lived in Riot and Luxury. Add to this, we have a good Prince, whose Inclinations as well as Circumflances will oblige him to comply with the reasonable Desires of his People. But let us not flatter our selves, this will not be always fo. If the Army should be continued a few years, they will be accounted part of the Prerogative, and 'twill be thought as great a violation to attemt the disbanding them, as the Guards in Charles the Second's time; it shall be interpreted a defign to dethrone the King, and be made an Argument for the keeping them up.

Eut there are other Reasons yet: The publick Necessities call upon us to contract our charge, that we may be the sooner out of debt, and in a condition to make a new War; and 'ris not the keeping great Armies on foot that will inable us to do so, but putting our selves in a caracity to pay them. We have had the experience of this in eight years Wat; for we have not bin successful against France in one Battel, and yet we have weighed it down by mere natural Strength, as I have feen a heavy Country Booby fomtimes do a nimble Wrestler: and by the same Method (not our Policy, Oeconomy, or Conduct) we must encounter them hereaster, and in order to it should put our selves in such Circumstances, that our Enemies may dread a new Quarrel, which can be no otherwife don, but by leffening our Expences, and paying off the public Ingagements as fast as we are able. 'Tis a miserable thing to consider that we pay near 4000000 l. a year upon the account of Funds, no part wherof can be applied to the public Service, unless they defign to that up the Exchequer; which would not be very prudent to own. I would therfore ask fom of our Men of Management; Suppose there should be a new War, how they propose to maintain it? For we all now know the end of our Line, we have nothing left but a Land-Tax, a Poll, and fom few Excises, if the Parliament can be prevailed upon to confent to them. And for once I will suppose, that all together, with what will fall in a Twelvemonth, will amount to 3000000 l. and a half, which is not probable; and we will complement them, by supposing they shall not in case of a new War give above fourteen or fifteen per cent. for Premiums and Interest, then the Remainder will be 3000000 % I believe I may venture to fay, they will not be very fond of lessening the Civil List, and lose their Salaries and Pensions. Then if we deduct 700000 pounds per annum, upon that account there will be 2300000 pounds per annum for the use of the War, if the People pay the utmost penny they are able: so that the Question will not be as in the last War, how we shall carry it on against France at large, but how 2300000 pounds shall be difposed to the greatest advantage; which I prefume every one will believe ought to be in a good Fleet.

This leads me to confider what will be the best, if not the only way of managing a new War in case of the King of Spain's Death, and a new Rupture with France; and I will suppose the Nation to be as perfectly free from

from all incumbrances as before the War. Most Men at this time of day, I believe, will agree with me that 'tis not our bufiness to throw Squibs in Flanders, send out vast Sums of Mony to have our Men play at bopeep with the French, and at best to have their brains beat out against stone Walls: but if a War is necessary there, 'tis our Interest to let the Dutch and Germans manage it, which is proper for their Situation, and let our Province be to undertake the Sea; yet if we have not wit and honesty enough to make such a bargain with them, but that we bring our felves again to a necessity of maintaining Armies there, we may hire Men from Germany for half the price we can raise them here, and they will be fooner ready than they can be transported from hence, that Country being full of Men, all Soldiers inured to Fatigue, and serving for much less pay than we give our own: befides, we shall carry on the War at the expence of others blood, and fave our own People, which are the strength and riches of all Governments; we shall save the charge of providing for the Officers when the War is on, and not meet with fuch difficulties in disbanding them.

There are for Gentlemen that have started a new method of making War with France, and tell us it will be necessary to fend Forces to Spain to hinder the French from possessing that Country; and therfore we must keep them up here to be ready for that service: which by the way is acknowledging the Horse ought to be disbanded, fince I prefume they don't design to fend them to Spain. But to give this a full Answer, I believe it is every ones opinion that there ought to be a strong Fleet kept up at Cales, or in the Mediterranean, fuperior to the French; and then 'twill be easier and cheaper to bring the Emperor's Forces by the way of Final to Spain, than to fend Men from hence: and they are more likely to be acceptable there, being of the fame Religion, and Subjects to the House of Aufria; whereas 'tis to be feared our Men would be in as much danger from that bigetted Nation as from the French: befides, the King of Portugal is arming for his own defence, and a fum of Mony well disposed

there, will enable him to raise double the Forces upon the spot as can be sent from hence with the same charge.

But for once I will admit it necessary we should fend Forces both to Flanders and Spain; yet 'tis no consequence that we must keep up a Standing Army in England till that time coms. We may remember Charles the 2d rais'd between 20 and 20000 Men to fight against France in less than forty days; and the Regiments this King raifed the first year of his Reign were complexed in a very short time: for my own part I am opinion, that a new Army may be raifed, before Ships and Provisions will be ready for their transportation, at least if the management is no better than 'twas once upon a time; and perhaps it may happen that the King of Spain will not die in the fummer time, and then we shall have the winter before us. We may add to this, that the King of France has disbanded a great many Men, that his Country now lies open in a great many places; that the Germans and Dutch keep great numbers of Men in constant pay; and in all probability there will be a Peace with the Turks: That Portugal and the Italian Princes must enter into the Consederacy in their own defence; and that the French will lie under an equal necessity to raise Forces with a much less Country than in the former War, to oppose such a mighty Union of Princes, who will attack him upon the first attemt he makes upon Spain.

And after all, what's the mighty Advantage we propose by keeping this Force? Why forsooth, having a small number of Men more (for the Officers will always be ready, and now a great part of the private Soldiers are to be rais'd in case of a new War) ready six Weeks sooner to attack France. And I durst almost appeal to these Gentlemen themselves, whether so small a Balance against France is equivalent to the hazard of our Liberties, destruction of our Constitution, and the constant Expence of keeping them up, to expect when the King of Spain will be pleased to die.

If these Gentlemen are really assaud of a new War, and don't use it as a Bugbear to fright us out of our Liberties, and to gain their little party-Ends, the way to bring the

People

People into it heartily, is to shew them that all their Actions tend to the public Advantage, to leffen the National Expences, to manage the Revenue with the greatest frugality, to postpone part of their own Salaries, and not grow rich while their Country grows poor, to give their hearty Affistance for appropriating the Irish Lands gain'd by the Peoples Blood and Sweat to the public Service, as was promis'd by his Majesty, and not to shew an unhappy Wit in punishing fom Men, and excufing others for the same fault, and spend three Months in Intrigues how to keep up a Standing Army to the dread of the greatest part of the Nation: for let them fancy what they please, the People will never consent to the raifing a new Army till they are fatisfied they shall be rid of them when the War is don; and there is no way of convincing them of that, but by disbanding these with willingness. When we see this don, we shall believe they are in earnest, and the People will join unanimously in a new War; otherwife there will always be a confiderable part of the Nation (whatever personal Honor they have for his Majesty, or fears of France) that will lie upon the Wheels with all their weight, and do them more harm than their Army will do them good.

To conclude, we have a wife and virtuous Prince, who has always indeavour'd to pleafe his People by taking those Men into his Councils which they have recommended to him by their own Choice; and when their Interest has declin'd, he has gratified the Nation by turning them out. I would therfore give this feasonable advice to those who were once call'd Whigs, that the way to preserve their Interest with his Majesty is to keep it with the People; that their old Friends will not desert them till they desert their Country, which when they do, they will be left to their own proper Merits: and tho I am not much given to believing Prophecys, yet I dare be a Prophet for once, and foretel that then they will meet with the fate of King Phys. and King Ush. in the Rehearfal, Their new Masters will turn them off, and no body else will take them.
